1. What do you think of Howard's feeling that it was pointless to train David up in a manner that David's own mother could not fully appreciate in the men she dated? I think otherwise because even Joe David's mother did not set an example to him he should have the chance to be taught how a man should act.

I think the book was a great book also very inspiring. It showed and explained a real good story and example of people who go through struggles and also how to deal with them. The story was interesting to me because I saw how Howard started to mentor the kid David at the beginning of the story and as days went by it showed how he started to care more and more for the boy and his mother even though he wasn't in the best position to Council somebody he still did a good job at taking care of David and his needs.
