

North of the Grove Author: William Hobbs Kemar S.

When I first started reading the Book, which is mostly look at a conversation over the computer. That's something that I found really interesting. It's very easy and simple to relate to when it comes to understanding what's going on.

David is a cool little kid, well not so much in the beginning due to his actions towards life and how he interprets things. But you could see as the story goes on as a person like Howard mold and shaped him. I felt as if Howard in some way was trying to find himself as a person. The reason being, because of his own childhood and experience. I felt as if he couldn't live with himself deep down inside to see such a young child miss out on life.

To me well Howard was trying to make an impact on this little child's life, he was also doing some in his own personal benefit. He is understandable for what his down in the past and to make a change to help David out was something that put him at ease.

It's not as hard to become someone even if you live in the so called "Hood". I could see where Howard is coming from trying to show him his rights and wrongs. I could relate to that because I've been in the same type of situation. It's all about a person's drive, well and want to become better. Basically to make something of themselves.

P.S. "Sorry Handwriting Sucks, Writing to fast"